FINANCIAL REVIEW.

Henry Clews's Weekly Review of Business Conditions.

WALL STREET IS IN SUSPENSE

On Account of the Political Excitement.

Adjustment of Congress will have a Good Effect—Revival of the Silver Cause Disturbs the Market—Future Questions to be Settled by Legislation.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Wall street is still held in suspense by the excitement and uncertainty attending the approach of the political conventions. The market is entirely in the hands of the professional operators, who under such circumstances are selling more congenially, so that the predominant tendency is towards a slow decline in prices. Outside these political conditions, influences are on the whole favorable. It is true, the export of gold continues, but Wall street has not taken that factor very seriously, and there are indications that the movement will soon come to an end. There is also an absence of return of securities from Europe, which is a remarkable consideration in the election. The railroads are doing well. Managers generally report a good business and encouraging prospects, and are making liberal provision for accommodating the coming crop movements. The earnings make a good showing compared with last year, which is more gratifying as a year ago the business was upon an increasing scale. In the mercantile business, the conditions are varied, some trades reporting a fair movement, but at low prices, whilst others are full of complaint. The dry goods districts are especially difficult to move off their season's stocks and have to adapt prices to the conditions of ample stocks and a slow demand. The iron trade is very sluggish, and the recent raising of prices by the combinations having put a severe check upon the demand. Taken as a whole, however, the material conditions affecting the market would probably admit of a generally rising stock market, were it not for the chilling effects of political uncertainties in connection with the silver question. These remarks as to the condition of trade have reference however to the local markets, while reports from the interior indicate a healthier state of business than prevails in this city. This is a difference to which we have found occasion to refer previously, and it needs to be kept in mind in judging of the state of affairs in the country at large. As the local depression comes nearer to Wall street, it produces an effect disproportionate to its real importance, and thus breeds in extent of pessimism exceeding what is warranted by the general national conditions.

The early adjournment of Congress will have the effect of assuring confidence in the future of the country. It will mean an end to the interference in the Cuban and Venezuelan questions; to disturbing silver schemes; and to virtual repudiation of resolutions for protecting its notes by borrowing gold and thereby precipitating the silver basis.

At the same time, it will require the most jealous oversight over the caliber of the men who are to be put in nomination for congressional functions. At the next session, some of the most important problems will be passed for solution that have ever occupied the attention of Congress, and no effort should be spared to secure the nomination of candidates who not only have a competent understanding of financial questions but also can be trusted for the maintenance of sound money principles. The undeniable revival of silverism, as shown by the political symptoms of the hour has naturally increased the solicitude of reflective men about the future of monetary adjustment. It is becoming more evident that the settlement of this entire problem is not likely to be affected by any one bill or at any one session of Congress, the large general question involving subsidiary parts upon each one of which there are likely to be wide differences of opinion, and which also will require separate treatment.

The first branch of the general issue to be disposed of must be the future position of silver. The nature of the coin standard is a matter so fundamental that all other money legislation must depend upon what is done in respect to that question. Upon the action in respect to silver must largely depend what is possible or what is probable in respect to other branches of treatment. After silver, would naturally come the legal tender problem. This may be found a much more difficult question than it is now supposed to be. Although it may be assumed that, as a rule, the withdrawal of money from circulation, or at least would demand that their extinction should be accomplished through a very slow process. As to the south and west, the old grange faction and the "more money" people would be likely to present a stubborn opposition to any sort of interference with the notes. The silverites also, so far as they are inflationists, may be expected to resist any withdrawal of paper circulation; the more so as they are aware that, as free coinage would mean a depreciation of all paper money, a larger volume of circulation would be needed under a silver regime. It is thus clear that the treatment of the legal tender question must involve a long and embarrassing struggle, with an uncertain outcome.

Next in order of treatment must come the bank note question. I say "next," because what may be done in this matter must largely depend upon what is done in the way of retiring the greenbacks and Sherman notes. This again is a question bristling with difficulties and diversities of opinion. There will be one faction who demand that the holders of greenbacks be treated as it is with an enlargement of the permitted issue from 30 per cent to 100 per cent of the par value of the bonds. In opposition there will be an important demand for constituting the entire issue of the bank and the liability of the stockholders either the sole basis of guaranty, or an alternative one with the present bond basis, at the choice of the banks. The latter and the former may be expected to make a resolute demand for the rights of the state banks to issue notes, either under the existing state laws or under a general national law defining the conditions under which any and all bank notes may be issued. Here is a problem involving discussions and conflict of interest and opinion sufficient to demand a session for its settlement. It is not likely that any such measure could be carried through a senate opposed to anything in the way of currency that might tend to supersede silver or lessen the blind popularity demanded for it.

Outside of questions of currency reform and purely as a question of practical finance, there is also the treasury question, that is, the question how shall the treasury be kept from running into the red? It is a question that will require a long and a hard fight to the extent of about $100,000,000 a year. This is a question of the most practical importance, and for the present circumstances, the treasury stands exposed to the possibility of being unable to maintain a stock of gold sufficient to pay its demand notes in that metal—a contingency which would involve the country drifting straight upon the silver basis. It is this danger which, more than any other, is producing the practical importance of the investments, and it demands most imperative immediate settlement. Yet it cannot be said that Congress has so far shown any such measure of capacity to deal with it in a safe and effective way; on the contrary the senate is now plotting to deprive the treasury of its gold, and the house is now plotting to keep in view the foregoing facts, first, as showing the necessity of making fact, many sessions for Congress as will secure for the next house an important element of men of standing and especially familiar with these complex questions and who are known to enter into sound views regarding them; and next, because it would only invite discouraging disappointment to calculate upon a new Congress putting financial and currency affairs upon a sound and well-regulated basis within the few short months. In the meantime, we must, as we safely may, depend upon the honest instincts and the plain common sense judgment of the American people for an ultimate safe and wholesome readjustment.

DEPRESSED WOOL INDUSTRY.

The Story as Told in the Columns of a Trade Paper—Depletion of Flocks—How Free Wool is Working.

The following letters appear in this week's Wool and Cotton Reporter, showing the condition of the industry in various sections, under the workings of the Democratic free wool tariff:

GREENFIELD, O., May 23, 1896.

Editor of Wool and Cotton Reporter.

The wool clip in our section is fully one-third short. The quality is very good. Very few ewes were bred in our section this last fall, and there have not been one-half as many lambs as usual this spring. In many cases sheepmen have sold out clean, and in looking up the wool business I was surprised to find many reliable sheep raisers without a sheep.

Yet there is no inquiry for the noted Hampshire Downs this season at home and abroad than I ever experienced since I have been in the business. There appears to be something in the air that inspires confidence in the sheep men. It is not the money at present prices that makes it a paying business. The Ohio people are willing to bear their share of the depression and yet they expect to outlive these present prices.

Wool in our section has been selling at from 9 to 12c in dirt. Our home manufacturers are securing the wool. Having a dry fall and winter, the wool is in good shape for the buyer, being clean and free from burrs. Can sheep men stay with their flocks in Ohio, with wool at 12c per pound, if so, they must breed and carry them along. Yours respectfully, HUGH GHORMLEY.

OWENTON, KY., May 21, 1896.

Editor of Wool and Cotton Reporter.

I am of the opinion that the clip is considerably less than last year, and that many having reduced their flock, and others having sold out entirely, and the low price of wool this year promises a still further curtailment of flocks. The average amount of the clip per sheep is about the same as last year, and so also is the quality. I am selling Oxford rams every year here, and that means a better grade of wool gradually being produced. As to the number of sheep in the county, I do not know. The greater part of the wool in this county has already been sold, principally to Louisville dealers, at 12c for good, clean, clean.

E. BAINBRIDGE.

ASHTON, IOWA.

Editor of Wool and Cotton Reporter.

The sheep industry is "done up" in this county. There are very few left—not enough to make a report on but only a few. I doubt if there are 1,000 in the county, counting lambs and all.

G. W. PATTERSON.

ST. JOHNS, MICH., May 24, 1896.

Editor of Wool and Cotton Reporter.

Clinton county in 1896 had 80,781 sheep. In '95 she was reduced to 66,534 sheep. The average clip in these years was a trifle over six pounds per head. Reports from various supervisors show that she is 50 per cent short of last year's report. This of course reduces the quantity of wool in the same ratio. As to the breeding, many of the farmers have abandoned it, having sold every sheep on the place. Some who have a few left, are at a loss as to what to do with them, and the reason given is that sheep and wool are so cheap that they will not pay for pasturing.

In regard to prices of wool at the present time, the St. John's market for fine unwashed wool is from 5 to 8c per pound; for fine washed, 8 to 11c. Coarse unwashed, 10 to 12c; coarse washed, 10 to 11c. It is very interesting to note the prices when he compares prices now with two and four years ago. In '92 wool was bringing on the 5th day of June 25c for medium washed; unwashed from 18 to 20c; unwashed fine from 14 to 16c, and for very fine lots as high as 25c, and as my business calls me through Gratiot county nearly every week, I find the wool conditions about the same in that county as in Clinton, and there is no prospect of its being any better. R. B. CARTERS.

CANTON, O., May 25, 1896.

Editor of Wool and Cotton Reporter.

The Ohio clip of wool is in good condition, notwithstanding the light hay crop of 1895, and the lower price for livestock. There has been a loss to the state by reason of the sale of so many flocks.

Mutton Merinos, with a long, strong wool and good heads, are in demand, and the horns bred out of the entire race of Merinos, are the most cherished sheep in Ohio.

TELL-TALE MOUTHS.

Lines which if remembered will enable you to Read Your Friend's Character. When Lips are Fishy or Gay.

Philadelphia Press: More things are revealed by the lips than she, who has never observed, dreams of.

It is remarkable what studies of character a casual glance at the lips of various individuals will bring forth. Glance now and then at the mouths and chins of people you know, and follow the rules given below for the purpose.

The mouth of a jealous person is one of the easiest to discover. It has deep indentations at the corners. The lips are coarse and heavy, and drawn at the corners to the extent of becoming able. This kind of mouth is apt to snap itself shut.

The good-natured mouth, which also denotes a considerable degree of thoughtfulness, is broad and straight. It shows the teeth in laughing and has full lips.

Most people know too well the meaning of those lips which droop. It is the melancholy signal of a pessimist, and the lips reach over the upper lip is an additional sign.

A mouth of one fond of drink or "uplifting," has an under lip of unusual heaviness. It droops and hangs over the teeth. The upper lip, in a wine lover, is heavy and a bad proportion. The chin of the individual is often indented.

A concealed mouth is inclined to be tightly drawn, except in cases of idiotic complacency. The corners often incline upward.

A fool is indicated by a receding chin. A lip which droops to the extent of showing the gums and teeth. The under lip is exceedingly heavy and the corners are apt to droop away from it.

You will know the tendencies of a cynic by the flexibility and elasticity of her lips. These are generally all of all expressions and many changes during a short space of time.

They are able to curl in withering scorn. To smile in veriest friendship.

Where to Ask for Charity.

A benevolent or charitable individual is discerned in this way. The lips are equal and the teeth well covered by them. They curl sufficiently to show the red of the inner lip without making the under one look as if it were to drop or to droop over the appearance of the upper. The upper lip hangs just a fraction into the lower one when the mouth is closed, and the corners of the mouth turn neither up nor down, but remain in a straight line. The benevolent mouth is often rendered additionally sweet by the presence of dimples.

Your friend who is given to putting will have lips which are at the corners thick lips and an upper lip slightly shorter than the lower. This combination also indicates a strong vein of vanity.

One variety of mouth, indicating a fool, was given above. Here is still another. If the mouth turn up abruptly at the corners belongs invariably to a stupid intellect. To one open to the influence of a stronger will. And, one, at times, is unusually obstinate concerning unimportant things.

A secretive man or woman will have a long upper lip. This will curl in up in the lower as if gathered. It appears to be firmly attached at the corners, and the lips fly off from the teeth.

Pick out your quick-tempered friend as follows: Her mouth seems cut from the corners only, but rather the entire mouth. Her upper lip is short and her under lip very full. She is haughty, impatient, high bred, independent and proud. She is not a medium between friends and bitter enemies.

A strong will has these symptoms: The lips cover the teeth and meet on a straight line, which shows a very little of the red, and have, when closed, a smooth but not a drawn appearance.

If you want to find the woman who is always in love, seek lips which are curled and which do not slightly from the teeth, and unite bluntly at the corners. These lips are almost impossible to close without making the lips assume a rather exaggerated appearance. Such a lip indicates the sentimentality woman.

The lips that belong by nature to the lovable mouth are often lengthened, broadened and rendered thinner by nervous tension, difficult tasks, and constant strain.

Rosy, but Not Strong.

The lower lip of a good contralto singer have often been remarked to possess a decided individuality. It is generally large and protruding. The upper lip in a soprano often noticeable for the same reason.

An indifferent mouth is found by this formula: Straight lips, not thick, not thin, but equal in length and thickness. The lips when in repose stand a bit apart. To have this mouth one is generally less susceptible to feelings of patriotism, something of a fatalist, brave when occasion requires and thoroughly indifferent to death and other fatalities.

The mouth of a motherly lover is distinguished by the perfect half-circle formed by the upper lip when the two lips are brought together. The lower lip is often long and full. The corners are slightly indented to form a smile, and the teeth are often in evidence.

Attractive also is the rosy mouth. It indicates great natural sweetness, without, however, any real feeling of sympathy. Such a nature—such a character as is painted in the "Dora" of David Copperfield.

Curved lips, very full, forming a large mouth, stand for cautiousness. The line of the mouth makes a decided double wave. Faith, generosity, truthfulness lie in the fact that the teeth are seen, and in addition to the character given above. The woman who has this mouth is reasonable, never flirts, knows not deceit, possesses equanimity and good judgment.

No One Killed.

PERRY, Okla., May 29.—Payne, thirty miles east, was visited by a hurricane yesterday and a half dozen people were killed and injured. Half of the houses in the town were blown down and all window lights facing north and west were smashed. In the vicinity of Sheridan, ten miles from Hennessey, many houses and barns were destroyed or wrecked, but as far as known no one was killed at that place.

Jackson Must Die.

NEWPORT, Ky., May 29.—Judge Helm to-day overruled the motion for a new trial for Scott Jackson, convicted of the murder of Pearl Bryan and sentenced Jackson to be hanged June 30.

Subsequently the court granted a motion for a stay of execution for sixty days to enable the defendant to take the case before the court of appeals.

CURED OF MALARIA.

From the Free Press, Harrisonburg, Va. "Yes," said Mr. W. R. Bowman, of Harrisonburg, Va., in conversation with a reporter of the Free Press, "I was once run down in health that I was compelled to resign a government position in Washington. I had no appetite, severe pains in the back, and was threatened with a fatal illness. After returning home I purchased a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and the result was like magic. Really, I was astonished at the great improvement in my health, and after taking some four or five boxes, I felt entirely cured. My normal appetite returned, was relieved of the pain in my back, and the malarial symptoms had wholly disappeared. That was I said, about two years ago, and to-day I am a well man."

"I recommended the pills to some of my friends, who were great sufferers, and they also used the medicine with great benefit."

"You consider the pills a very great medicine, then, Mr. Bowman?" we queried.

"I do, indeed. I consider them a blessing to suffering humanity, and nothing is too good to say for them."

The foregoing is but one of the many remarkable cures that have been reported as following the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Diseases which have heretofore been supposed to be incurable, succumbed to this wonderful medicine as readily as the most trifling ailments. In many cases the reported cures have been too remarkable to be believed, and the leading newspapers have gone to work and investigated them. The only result, however, has been to find every detail of the cases correctly reported, and not the slightest vestige of fraud has been discovered. Their fame has spread to all parts of the world, and there is scarcely a drug store in the land where they are not to be had.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, form of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excess of whatever nature. They are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.
